

Luxembourg

Cour de Justice Européenne : "UE 2030, objectif zéro violence : Comment éradiquer à échelle européenne les conflits de genre, homophobes, xénophobes, racistes et antisémites ?" (Commission anglaise)

Introduction

The Grand Duchy of Luxembourg, as a member of the European Union, stands before this esteemed assembly to champion a mission of great importance: the complete eradication of discriminatory violence by the year 2030.

Luxembourg prides itself on a political environment defined by parliamentary democracy and constitutional monarchy, firmly rooted in the principle of the separation of powers. Presently, our governing system embodies a fusion of conservative and liberal ideologies, fostering a nuanced governance strategy that prioritizes both personal liberties and the preservation of societal equilibrium.

In a world marked by persistent inequalities and occasional misunderstandings regarding diversity, it is essential for us to cultivate an environment where each person feels not only secure but deeply valued, regardless of their gender, sexual orientation, ethnicity, or religious beliefs.

Challenges and Issues

Discriminatory violence based on gender, sexual orientation, ethnicity, or religious belief constitutes a grave infringement upon human rights, erecting formidable barriers against the vision of a unified Europe embracing its rich tapestry of diversity. Startling statistics reveal a troubling truth: across Europe, one out of every three women has experienced incidents of physical or sexual violence, while LGBTQ+ individuals disproportionately face the impact of hate crimes. At the same time, there has been a worrying surge in racist and anti-Semitic attacks in recent years, fostering fear and insecurity within marginalized communities..

Luxembourg, a bastion of coexistence and diversity, confronts these challenges head-on, recognizing the imminent threat they pose to social cohesion and civil tranquility. Whether manifested in physical assaults, verbal abuse, or psychological torment, such acts of violence demand unequivocal condemnation and resolute action.

Luxembourg's Stance

Luxembourg reaffirms its determined commitment to combat all forms of discrimination and violence, both domestically and on the international stage. We have ratified pivotal international conventions such as the Istanbul Convention and actively supported European initiatives aimed at fostering equality and safeguarding fundamental rights. Firmly attached to our national identity lies a profound sense of pride in our heritage of tolerance and inclusivity, values that we tirelessly propagate within the EU and beyond.

Furthermore, we recognize the necessity of respecting and protecting the rights of indigenous communities, migrants, and refugees, often the most vulnerable targets of violence and discrimination. By ensuring equitable access to social services, education, and employment opportunities, we aim to fortify the creation of social cohesion and eliminate intercommunity tensions.

Implemented Measures

Luxembourg has embarked upon a progressive trajectory, enacting national policies designed to combat discriminatory violence. Ongoing awareness campaigns aim to educate the public about the dangers associated with such behavior, while strong support structures have been established to aid victims. At the same time, we have strengthened our legal framework to ensure prompt and fair administration of justice.

Integral to our efforts are educational programs integrated in school, promoting gender equality and diversity from an early age. Civil society organizations play a pivotal role, offering direct support to victims and defending more inclusive and equitable policies.

Proposed Solutions

To propel us closer towards our shared goal, Luxembourg supports the formulation and implementation of a comprehensive European strategy. This strategy must entail enhanced coordination among Member States, facilitating the exchange of best practices, and the adoption of both preventive and disciplinary measures. We advocate for the establishment of a European observatory tasked with monitoring incidents of violence and evaluating the efficacy of extant policies.

Special attention must be given to utilizing digital technologies, employing them not just as tools for raising awareness but also as platforms for combating hate speech. Strengthening regulations governing cybersecurity and promoting digital knowledge will decrease the proliferation of online violence, fostering a digital sphere that is both safer and more inclusive.

Conclusion

In alignment with its steadfast Europhile tradition, Luxembourg reaffirms its unwavering commitment to a Europe free from the plague of violence. We remain steadfast in our conviction that through concerted cooperation and solidarity, we can realize a European Union where every citizen thrives in safety, dignity, and respect. By pooling our collective resources and harnessing the transformative power of unity, we can translate our shared vision into palpable reality—a reality where diversity is celebrated as a source of strength, and violence finds no shelter. The moment to act is upon us, and Luxembourg stands ready to play an active role in this noble endeavor.